JIN Data Exchange (JINDEX)

We conducted design sessions with AOC and WSP and formulated a procurement plan in consultation with Cammy Webster and John Howe of DIS' Enterprise Business Solutions Group. We also conducted a code "walkthrough" with an architect from Templar, the developer for Summary Offender Profile (SOP), which suggested that the SOP source code will be very useful in the construction of the court and criminal history (CACH) query. In conjunction with design efforts for CACH, we began discussions with users about which of the many queries available in ACCESS will be available as part of the service.

I circulated a draft of the Baseline Requirements document to the Technical Advisory Group (TAG) for review and comment. The final version should be available next week. It provides greater detail about the specific elements to be implemented for JINDEX.

Summary Offender Profile (SOP)

I was delighted to learn yesterday that the SOP source code will be very useful in the construction of the CACH query. It was also gratifying to hear the Templar developer opine that we were clearly taking advantage of standards and technology (e.g. XML and web services) that were not seen as mature at the time SOP development took place, but that clearly are the way to go at this time.

Unfortunately, the connectivity programs with AOC continue. On a more positive note, though, the DOC added fifteen users to our pilot deployment this week and I continue to receive inquiries about access to the system.

The House Criminal Justice and Corrections Committee sent HB 1650 to the Rules Committee, with changes proposed by the Association of Washington Cities, which would preserve the signature requirement for paper tickets. I spoke with Representative Lovick today in an effort to enlist his help in moving the bill forward.

We also suggested some alternate language to AWC, which they accepted, and we forwarded a suggestion to staff from the Senate Judiciary Committee, with hopes that the Committee will schedule the companion bill, SB 5627 for executive session.

Miscellaneous

► I began preparing an application for the JIN Program office for this year's federal grants. In consultation with local partners, I am hoping to add services to the JINDEX platform, which was funded by last year's Byrne grant. The TAG will review the proposals on March 15 and pass recommendations on to the Board for review at the subsequent meeting.
